My name is Carl Johann Roeckel. By birth and nationality I am a Swiss, but cosmopolitan in every taste and habit. In my early days I regularly followed the profession of a courier, as I do now occasionally when any one of my old patrons or their friends require such services, which is rather infrequent, the taste of the travelling public having degenerated into hasty journeys by express trains, with the consequent loss of enjoyment of the different phases of scenery through which the travellers are passing. In the course of my many years' experience I have been witness to many strange occurrences, have assisted in many a secret and adventurous undertaking, and have been subject to many perils. From among such varied experiences I give the following strange story, suppressing for obvious reasons the real names of those interested:

Many years ago I was engaged as courier to his Excellency the Hon. Frederick Eslington, ambassador-extraordinary of his Britannic Malesty King George, on a special secret mission to one of the great continental Powers. Having finished his duties, and successfully attained the object of his mission, we started on our homeward journey in the summer of 18-. The period was one to be long remembered, from the political excitement which existed throughout all Europe, almost every Government having unsheathed the sword.

We had travelled a considerable part of the first stage of our return journey, when his Excellency, who was feeling the fatigues of the incessant travelling in the heavy, rumbling carriage, said he should stop at the next town we arrived at, and take rest and refreshment, both of which he was much in need of, besides having important State documents to transcribe. In due course we arrived at the small town of -, on the confines of Germany, where we put up. We stayed a day and a half there; and I was then instructed to have the carriage and horses in readiness to continue our journey. His Excellency meanwhile had completed his writings, to which he bad assiduously applied himself, and told me, as it was a fine afternoon, he would take a short walk, and on his return resume kept so quietly, as the British Government his journey at once, and I must therefore make all necessary preparations. He accordingly left the hotel. But he was never seen afterward, nor was anything known of his fate.

I waited for upward of an hour anxiously, and then made a close search for him, which I continued for several days, but not a trace could I discover of my master. A villager, however, living outside the town, brought to me at the hotel a pair of overalls, which he stated he had found in a neighboring copse. I recognized the garment as belonging to his Excellency, and at once repaired with the villager to the copse, and closely examined the spot, but found no trace or sign of any struggle.

Finding it useless to prosecute the search, I at once returned to London with his Exto his family. The British Government at large rewards offered, took effective steps Excellency's family, and large rewards those concerned in the tragedy. The landwidely disseminated for any information respecting the missing ambassador; but they failed one and all to gain any information of, or the slightest clew to, his fate. A certain amount of suspicion attached to me, but it was only momentary, and I at once cleared myself of it, and assisted the distracted wife and her missing husband's se caused to the ambassador's wife and family by the distressing calamity. Magisterial investigation was made, experts were employed, and every endeavor made to penetrate the dark veil of mystery surrounding the event; but all efforts were unsuccessful. One of his Majesty's ambassadors had completely and mysteriously disappeared without leaving a clew to light up the awful obscurity which enveloped the tragic occur-

Several years had elapsed since the distressing event, and the memory, the painful memory, of it was beginning to fade from my mind, when I happened to be in Antwerp on a short tour through Belgium with patrons. And while listlessly strolling by myself on the quay one summer's evening, watching the passengers disembarking from the newly-arrived steamer, I little man of beggarly appearance, who spoke to me in Flemisb. I nodded acquiescence. "Well," said be, "you must also know in your long experience of travel, that all ticularly in Vienna, have their secret club. Bitterly have I repented since, for it is to that circumstance I owe my present deplorable state of mind and position."

it was also known that he was on the point of starting with them for England. The Chief Commander had important reasons for obtaining these papers, or copies of them, and of one in particular above all jy 15-3m.

son who must execute the orders, and the choice had fallen on me as postilion, and the more likely to effect a successful result. By virtue of my oath I was bound to obey, or I should have suffered a street death, by assassination probably. I need not tell you my instructions; but a dreadful fate awaited you in the event of you or his Excellency obstructing our wishes. In every town through which we passed there were emissaries of the Chief Society to assist me, so great is its organization; and when I received your instructions to pull up at the next town, which, if you remember, was 8---, I knew the wishes of the Chief Commander would be effectually carried out. The landlord of the hotel you stayed at and the head hostler were known to me as members of the Chief Society, and there were other residents in the town also members, whom I did not know. So you see, my friend, how his Excellency and you were encompassed in a net from which there was no escape," and he chuckled to himself as he said it. "Now you remember how his Excellency was always engaged in writing his dispatches and documents. Well, there was consequently great difficulty in getting a view of the papers without adopting foul means, and ime was of great importance to the Chief Commander." "What!" I exclaimed, in great astonishnent, my hair almost on end with the suddenness of the confession-" what! Do you mean to tell me, Carl Johann Roeckel, that you murdered his Excellency in cold blood?" "Not exactly that, friend," he qu' tly replied. "When his Excellency went for that short walk the head hostler also went for a stroll in the same direction. A short distance from the town the hostler met a friend, also a member, and they quickly bound and gagged his Excellency and carried bim to the cellar of the latter's bouse, where they kept him secretly until after the excitement of the disappearance had subsided, when he was taken to Vienna in the involuntary disguise of a dangerous lunatic peasant, and afterward"-. And be made a significant sign indicative of strangulation. "The papers were abstracted by the landlord and handed to me, and I in turn delivered them to the Chief Commander personally. Nothing was ever said about the missing documents, if you recollect, because only one other person besides his Excellency and the Chief Commander knew of them, and he dared not say what they were."

"But how," asked I, "was everything made a great stir over the matter, and large rewards were offered?"

"Well," replied be, "those to whom the matter was referred were mostly members of the Chief Society, which, you must remember, numbered in its roll members of all ranks and stations. The pair of overalls found in the copse some days after the disappearance were purposely placed there to lead and encourage the belief that his Excellency had been robbed and then murdered." "But you do not account for your being here in Antwerp now," said I. "Well, friend," continued he, and he drew himself closer to me and spoke in a very low tone-"well, the Chief Commander, in consequence of the stir made by both the British and our Government, once instituted inquiries, as also did his to prevent it by ordering the deaths of were offered by both, and advertisements lord of the botel, however, suddenly decamped to America-where he will tracked, never fear-after hearing of the death of the hostler and his friend, who were found stabbed in their beds; and I escaped here by circuitous routes, and I have remained in hiding ever since. Presently his father joined him on the burricane-deck and asked him how he was enjoying himself. "First-rate," was the enthusiastic reply. "I'm going to be a steamboat-man, papa." "All right," responded the 'judge"; "but you will have to study navigation, astronomy, and divers other sciences in order to be a good one." The lad said nothing at the time, but appeared to be revolving the difficulties of the case in his mind.
